In 2008, Seattle police officer Kim Bogucki walked through the gates of the Washington Corrections Center for Women, intent on asking a group of mothers for permission to work with their school-aged daughters in a Girl Scouts Beyond Bars troop for girls with incarcerated parents. On that day, Bogucki asked the mothers a critical question: "If there was something someone could have said or done that would have changed the path that led you here, what would it have been?" Join us for this encouraging film.

Refreshments, discussion and resources.

Jail Brakers offers opportunities to connect with the community to make a positive impact on the lives of families touched by incarceration. Support local efforts to help lower recidivism rates by building networks and connections for social, educational, and job programs. Creating strong and healthy communities is everyone's goal and we are committed to make every effort to lift families and individuals by encouraging hope and offering opportunities. Will you join us?
